BRIGHT COFFEE SHOP INSIGHTS

Sales performance and business insights

COFFEE SHOP OVERVIEW

BUSINESS CONTEXT SNAPSHOT

Overall performance

Total recorded revenue is ~$698,812, indicating steady demand across the period.

Revenue drivers

Coffee + tea contribute ~two-thirds of sales; bakery and drinking chocolate lift basket size via add-ons and cross-sell.

Timing patterns

Weekdays are the volume engine (slight peaks on Monday/Friday); weekends show lower revenue but higher average spend per transaction.

Location balance

Revenue is well distributed across Hell’s Kitchen, Astoria, and Lower Manhattan—supporting consistent brand performance across neighborhoods.

REVENUE BY CATEGORY

Core drivers

Coffee leads at 39% and Tea follows at 28%; together they represent 67% of revenue.

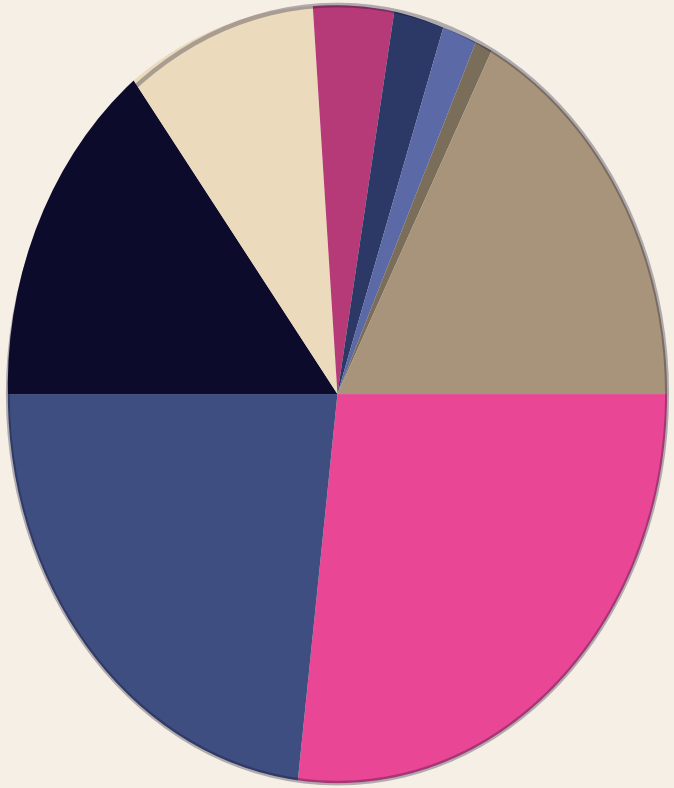
Basket expansion

Bakery (12%) and Drinking Chocolate (10%) add meaningful lift through pairing and seasonal appeal.

High-margin niches

Coffee Beans, Branded Items, Flavours, Loose Tea, and Packaged Chocolate (11% combined) support loyalty and premium mix opportunities.



Revenue Distribution by Category

- Coffee 39%
- Tea 28%
- Bakery 12%
- Drinking Chocolate 10%

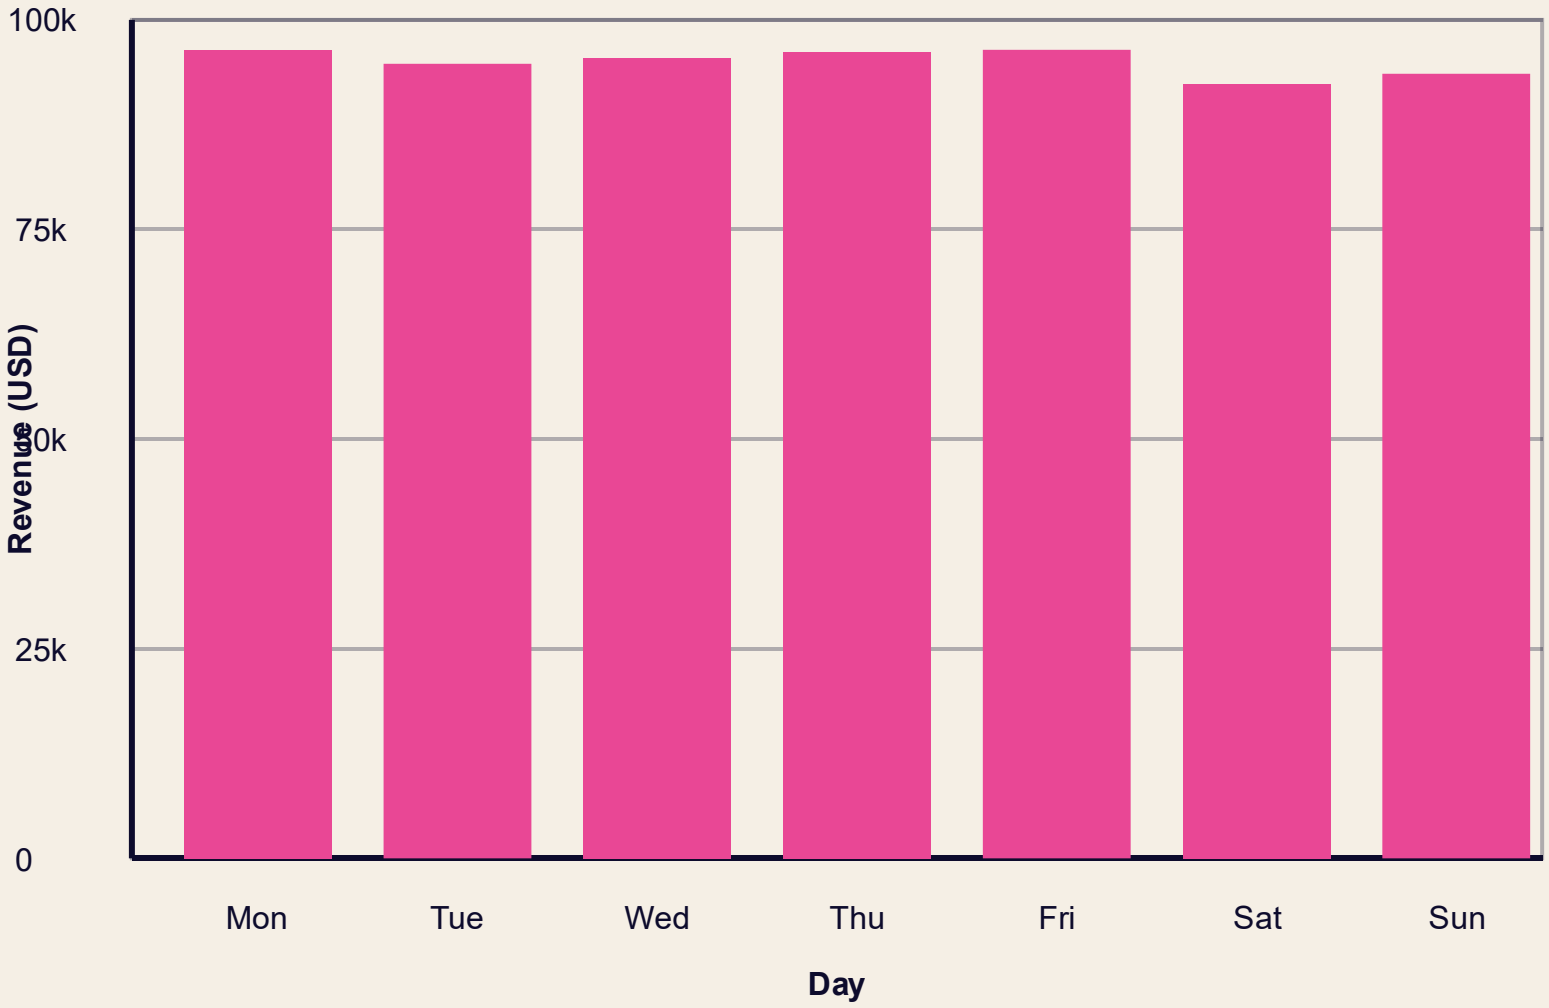
SALES BY WEEKDAY

Weekdays are consistently strong

Monday and Friday lead at just over $101K, while Tuesday–Thursday remain tightly clustered near $99K–$101K, reflecting routine commuter and workday demand.

Weekend volume is lower (but higher spend)

Saturday ($96,894) and Sunday ($98,330) trail weekdays mainly due to fewer transactions; focus weekends on experiential offers, bundles, and limited-time items while keeping weekday operations fast and consistent.



REVENUE BY LOCATION

Balanced revenue split

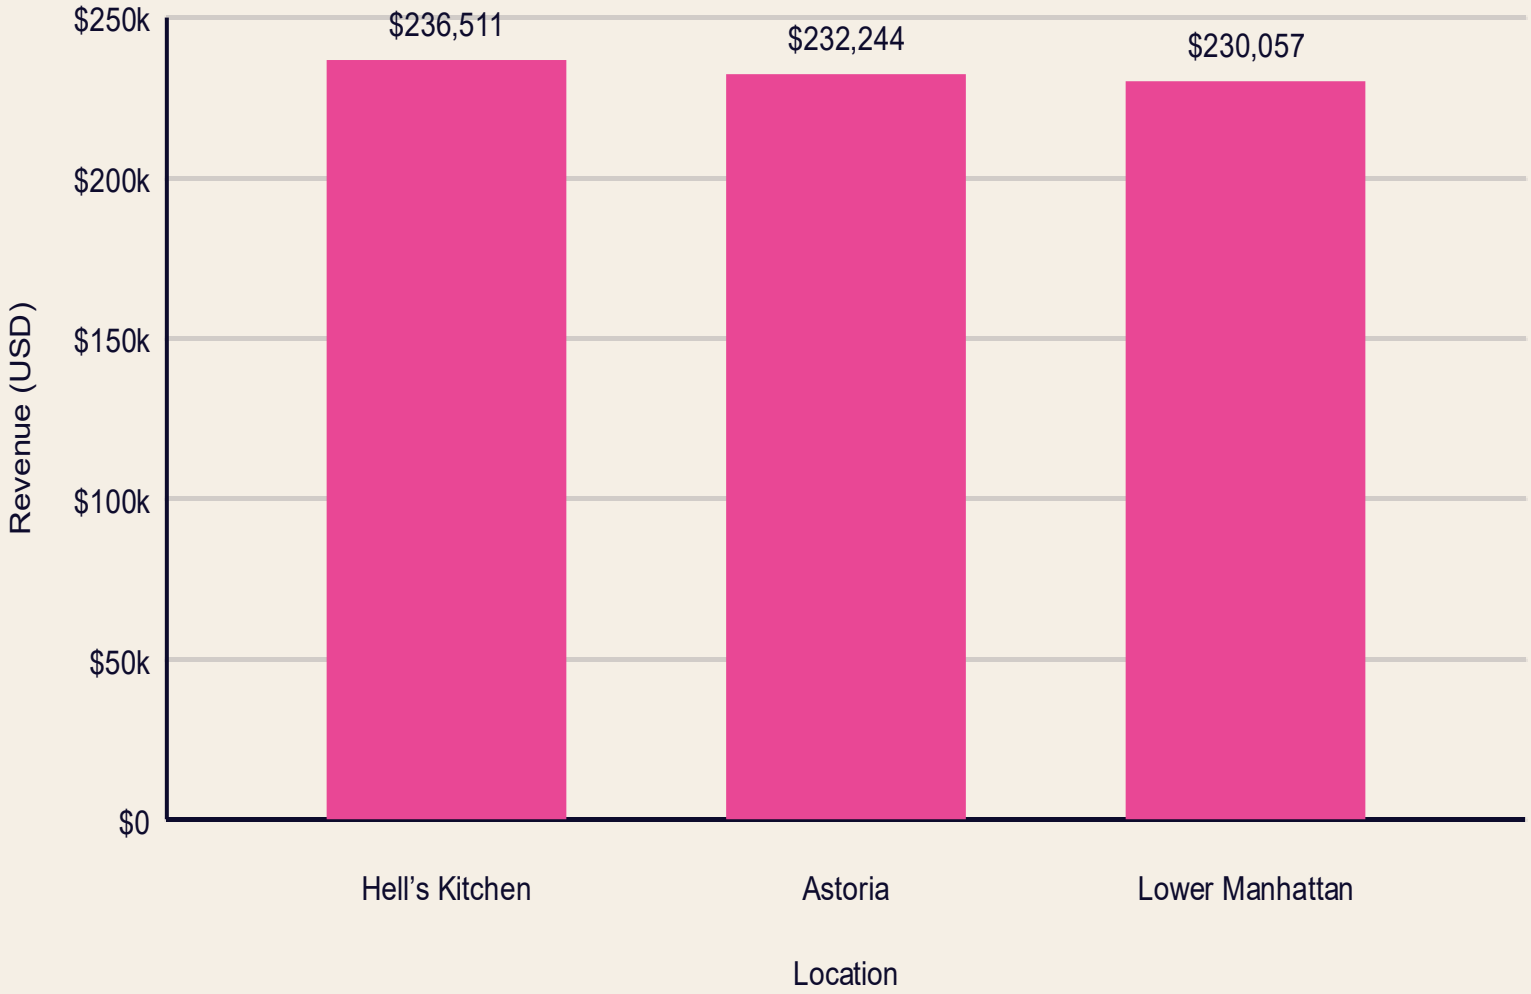
Hell's Kitchen leads slightly at $236,511 (33.8%), with Astoria at $232,244 (33.2%) and Lower Manhattan at $230,057 (32.9%).

What drives differences

Hell's Kitchen benefits from weekday traffic and premium beverages/bakery; Astoria over-indexes in tea and bakery; Lower Manhattan is commuter-led, strong in beans and branded products.

Implication

Keep the core menu consistent, but localize promotions and assortment emphasis to neighborhood preferences to lift each store while preserving a unified brand.



WEEKDAY VS WEEKEND SALES

Volume-driven weekdays

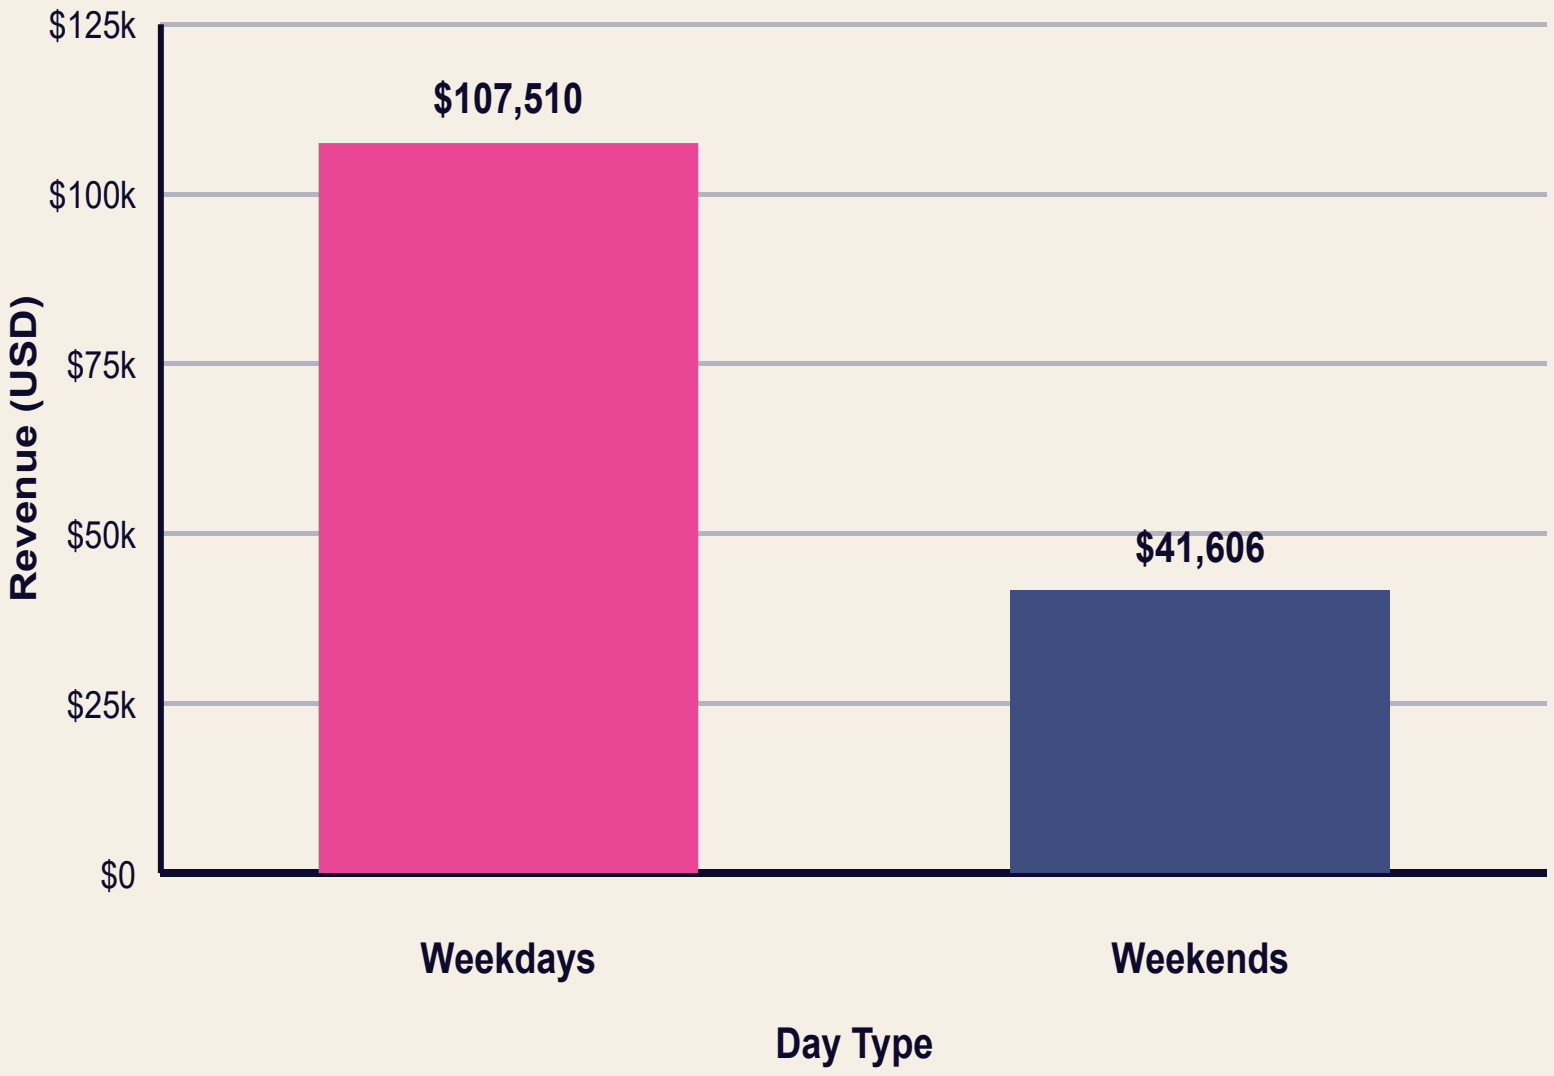
Weekdays generate $107,510 vs $41,606 on weekends—about 2.6× higher, largely from higher transaction volume.

Value shift on weekends

Weekends show more relaxed, higher-value choices (specialty lattes, premium blends, drinking chocolate, bakery), increasing average spend per transaction.

Operational priorities

Staff and streamline peaks on weekdays; use weekend promotions, themed offerings, and bundles to encourage longer visits and higher basket size.



TIME-OF-DAY SALES TRENDS

Morning peak (6–11am)

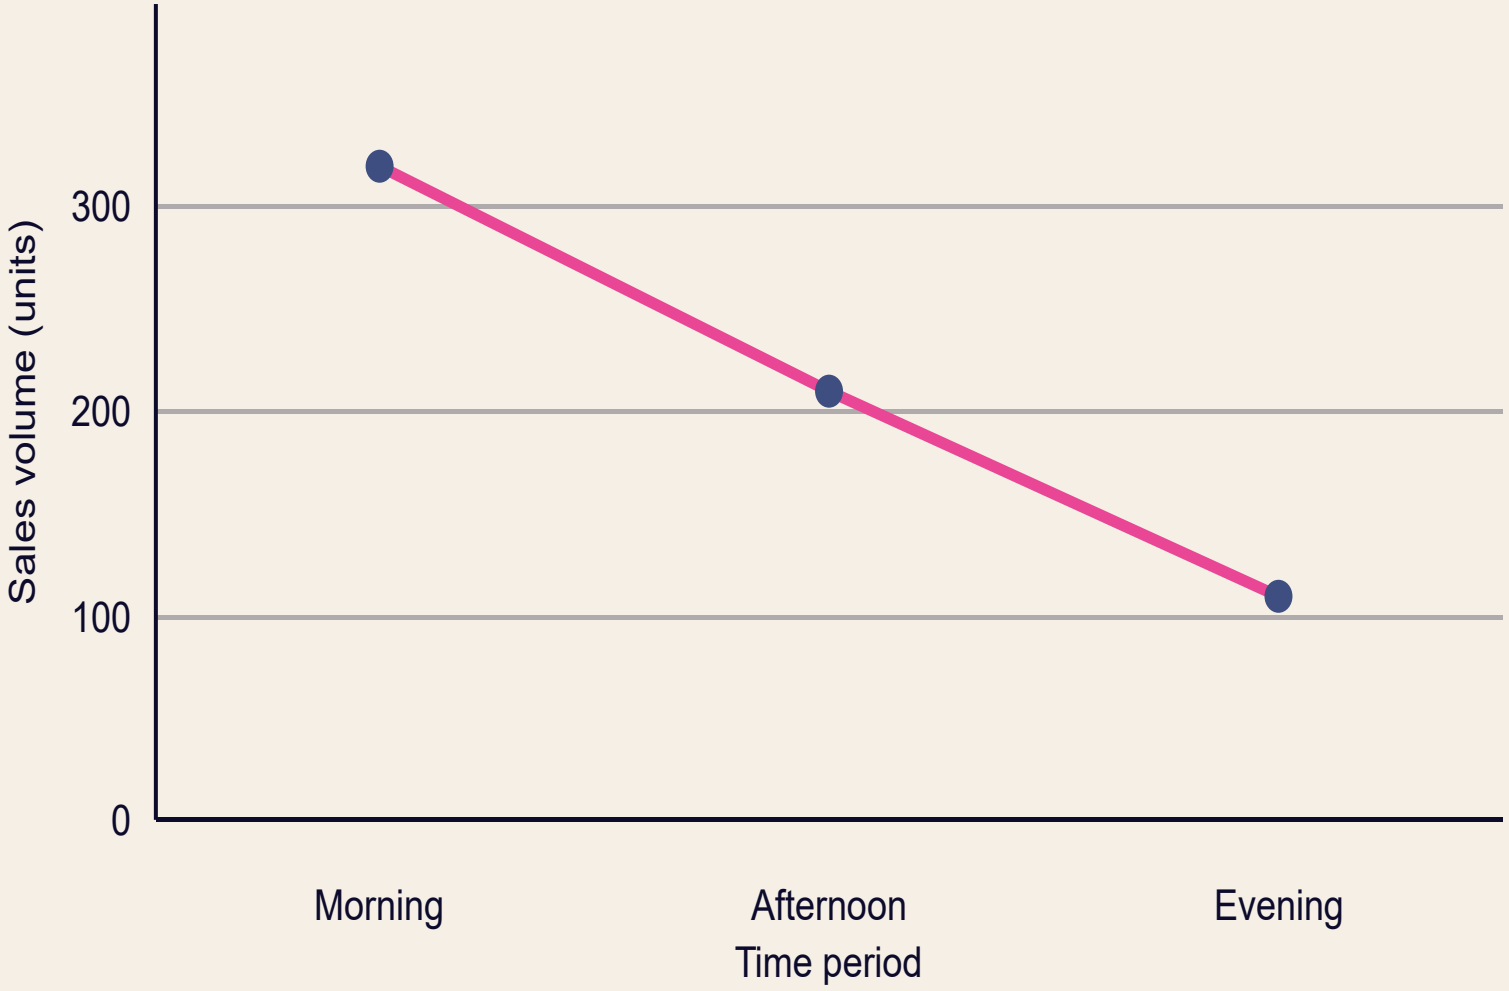
Highest sales driven by coffee + bakery (drip, lattes, cappuccinos, croissants). Prioritize combo visibility and front-line staffing.

Afternoon steady (12–5pm)

Solid volume with stronger demand for espresso-based drinks and tea—optimize messaging around “pick-me-up” and break-time options.

Evening preference (6–10pm)

Lower volume but more premium choices (drinking chocolate, specialty teas, larger espresso beverages). Feature indulgent/seasonal items to lift revenue.



KEY INSIGHTS

What the combined data reveals

Core demand is stable

Coffee and tea dominance confirms Bright Coffee Shop’s core value proposition remains strong and aligned with customer expectations.

Weekday routines drive performance

Consistent weekday results highlight routine-driven customers, making reliability and speed critical success factors.

Portfolio levers: locations and pairing

Balanced performance across store locations reduces risk and enables piloting by neighborhood. Bakery add-ons lift transaction value, reinforcing cross-selling and menu pairing strategies.

Pricing confidence and growth windows

Medium and high spend patterns indicate comfort with moderate premium pricing when quality and variety are clear. Weekends and evenings present opportunities to monetize through targeted experiences, not volume alone.

STRATEGIC RECOMMENDATIONS

Growth opportunities for Bright Coffee

1) Protect peak weekday demand

Prioritize weekday mornings and afternoons with optimal staffing, inventory readiness, and fast service during peak hours to maximize throughput and satisfaction.

2) Premiumize the core menu

Expand and promote premium coffee and tea offerings, reinforcing quality and specialty positioning where customers show willingness to pay.

3) Grow weekends with bundles and experiences

Use bundled deals featuring bakery and drinking chocolate to lift average transaction value, and introduce weekend-specific concepts (e.g., tasting flights, seasonal specials) to drive foot traffic and longer visits.

4) Test and iterate with discipline

Use Hell’s Kitchen as a launch pad for limited-time offers and new products, and maintain a data-driven cadence to review trends and adjust strategies across locations and time periods.
